Movement Exchange Announces First Annual Move To Change Day on Saturday, April 11th, 2015

Movement Exchange, a San Francisco-based nonprofit inspiring dancers to be more civically engaged global citizens, is hosting the first annual Move To Change Day on April 11th, 2015. On this day, communities will gather to share dance in studios, on stages, or even in the streets—all with the goal of giving dance to children at our partner orphanages.

Uniting dancers across the nation to show support and celebrate the power of dance, Move To Change Day will raise awareness and funds to sustain weekly dance classes for children in the Panamanian orphanages we serve. Anyone who has a passion for dance, service, and arts education is welcome to "Move To Change" by organizing a workshop, a performance, or an online fundraising page.

This is the inaugural year of Move To Change Day. While continuing to expand its exchange programs based on sustainable impact in international communities, Movement Exchange is also expanding its domestic influences. After having established over 20 Move-Ex university chapters in the United States, Move To Change Day is the organization's next major step to build up a nation-wide network of all like-minded individuals.

About Movement Exchange:

Movement Exchange is a non-profit and U.S Embassy sponsored organization founded by Anna Pasternak. The organization is dedicated to inspiring dancers to be more civically engaged global citizens through its network of university chapters, international dance exchanges, and year-round programs in underserved communities. Movement Exchange supports dance programs year-round at 3 orphanages in Panama and 2 schools in India by employing local dance instructors. The organization also serves domestic communities through its university chapters. Through its paralleled domestic and international model of sustainable dance education, Movement Exchange helps at-risk youth to gain an improved sense of self-esteem, social skills, and creative expression.
